To look in the horse's eyes is to see a perpetual state of panic. But the crowd is too captivated by his clownish gait to notice his attempts to escape the pain of his own steps. >>

38 A Little Help for a Lot of Territory

New Mexico's Doña Ana County is home to rural desert communities where some people don't know or care about animal control regulations. Faced with serving an area that covers more than 3,800 square miles, the county's animal control department is using volunteers for tasks that don't require specialized training.

5 Letterbox

7 Scoop

Oprah's magic ripples through shelters; visitors from overseas get a boost at Animal Care Expo; an ACO and a pooch meet at an "icebreaker"; Portland pups perfect their pouts for the local shelter; and more.

22 Coffee Break

In your space, you told us about your favorite (or least favorite!) book or movie about animals.

25 Creature Feature

The Tennessee walking horse has been a victim of cruel performance enhancers for decades, but big money gives unscrupulous trainers incentive to flout the law and keep the abuse under wraps.

45 The "101" Department

A coat of paint here and a leaky faucet there may seem like back-burner stuff when you're busy saving lives, but properly maintaining your shelter now will save money later and pay off in improved animal care.

51 Shelter Medicine

The questions seem simple enough: How much space do you have in your shelter, and how much do you need? But Dr. Kate Hurley explores how the equation gets complicated by such factors as needed adoption capacity, staff time per day, "animal care days," and turnover time.

61 The Behavior Department

Conflicts can crop up in multicat homes, causing the animals undue stress and health problems. But dissension can be minimized without calling the kitty shrink.

68 Off Leash

NFL player Jarrod Cooper has played ball with Dolphins, Rams, Eagles, and Panthers ... but now Oakland's shelter pooches are getting a turn, too.
